Soon to be defunct

Webmasters of \sikhmarg.com and \gurmukhyoga.com are in their late 60s at least, and it is possible that their sites will die with them. Sikh bulletin boards from the early to mid 2000s, such as Sikh Sangat, Sikh Awareness, Sikh Philosophy Network, and Gurmat Bibek, are also at risk of going offline at any time.

\sikhmarg.com

Status: Active since April 10, 2001, but domain expires on April 10, 2025. Unclear if it will be renewed.

Description: A prolific Web 1.0 "heterodox" Sikh site which contains over 6,000 Punjabi-language articles and no more than 20 English-language articles. The site owner, Makkhan Singh Pureivaal, gave up on Sikhi in 2020 after seeing that Sikhi has gone further towards Hindooization, despite his best efforts. It is unclear if he will renew this site's domain name, but for now he and some other writers still post on it occasionally.

Most notable feature: This site has a Nanakshahi calendar which seems to be based on the 2003 revision: \sikhmarg.com/Nanakshahi-Calendar.html Also, the fact that this entire website is still Web 1.0 in 2025 is just wonderfully wild.

\gurmukhyoga.com

Status: Active for now. Gursant Singh does not like 3HO at all, so it seems like he will keep this site around for the rest of his life.

Details: Gursant Singh's blog/forum which contains numerous articles detailing the corruption of 3HO. It was last updated in 2015. This site is just one footprint of Gursant Singh's rather extensive Internet presence.

Bulletin boards

Sites: \sikhsangat.com, \sikhawareness.com, \sikhphilosophy.net, \gurmatbibek.com

Status: All alive for now. Most are up for domain renewal within a few months.

Description: Before the advent of social media, forums like Sikh Sangat, Sikh Awareness, Sikh Philosophy Network, and Gurmat Bibek emerged in the 2000s to facilitate discussions on Sikh theology, philosophy, history, culture, and politics. Although posting activity has diminished to almost zero on these sites nowadays, they are still viewed by hundreds of people daily (SPN at this moment of writing has about 750 non-robot visitors), and many of their threads still contain tons of useful information that is hard to find elsewhere. Sikh Sangat, Sikh Awareness, and Gurmat Bibek are more in tune with what you normally find on r/Sikh and other mainstream Sikh places on social media, but Sikh Philosophy Network is highly unusual in that it also facilitated "heterodox" discussions, and remained popular for some time despite doing so.

Most notable feature: Many old but informative threads.
